

SATEAL TEACHMENT

27th April 2026

collaborativelearning.org

not everything that counts
can be counted

not everything that can be counted counts

Text of seven minute presentation.

The clp website is moving to a secure platform next month but going https only means, that to save money, I have to do a lot of webpage housekeeping, The site will still be easy to find and is used extensively by colleagues worldwide. However, my growing deafness means that I cannot tune in any more to classroom group talk and without that unique opportunity to listen in as a fly on the wall, I am not happy about testing out new activities. I am still very happy to post any of your tried and tested activities. There are not so many turning up lately because I suspect the opportunities to develop them are diminishing. I have seen evidence that partnership teaching is still surviving. The recent LATE conference demonstrated that teachers still appreciate the special value and creativity afforded by joint planning incorporating an EAL and subject perspective.

So I have borrowed Jude's weblog 'Joined in Thinking' which is now on the clp site. You may have enjoyed her earlier postings which I have put in an archive since they are all still very relevant. I am now going to start to read a posting about how conversation and empowerment go hand in hand. There won't be time in this presentation to finish it so I hope you will be tempted to find it and read on later.